"A Woman Taken by the Wind": Finding Lilith, Knowing Lilith – an Astrological Exploration

Throughout history and across cultures, there has been a seductive, intemperate Lilith figure living on the fringes of conventional society. As the baby-stealing, husband-seducing, demon-birthing, screech-owl, night-wind bogey-woman, Lilith has served as a convenient hook for everything 'dark' and evil that patriarchal society has wanted to keep outside the city gates. And, as the uncompromisingly independent keeper of earth knowledge and diviner of the universe, she has once again become an archetypal feminine heroine, standard bearer for the outcast, the not normal, the disruptors of the status quo, and the ones who really know which way the wind blows. But who is Lilith – mythologically, symbolically, culturally, historically, astrologically, and astronomically? Why has she so successfully defied her exile by living in our cultural imaginations for so long? And what does an astrologer do with an asteroid, a point in the lunar orbit that can be measured in multiple ways, and a shadowy maybe-dust-cloud that all share the same name? Let me be clear: Lilith is as knowable an entity as Mars, Saturn, or the Moon, but first we need to find her. In this lecture, I'll present a chart-filled history of Lilith's use in astrology, instructions for placing her in your chart (assuming you are ready to!), her evolution as a cultural and mythological archetype, and suggestions for interpreting her that draw on themes common to all Lilith objects and points.

BIO: Paul is a Philadelphia-area native with a PhD in geography from the University of Nebraska-Lincoln and a Level I NCGR-PAA certification in astrology. He reads charts professionally on occasion and has been lecturing in person to groups throughout the Northeastern US since 2017 and virtually to groups in the US and England. During the pandemic years, he created four videos for the National Council for Geocosmic Research's Foundations of Astrology video lecture series on NCGR's YouTube channel, NCGR-The Geocosmic. His ninth house Virgo Moon enjoys learning along with others. Paul recently integrated the perspectives and techniques of Hellenistic astrology through Nightlight Astrology's 3-year certification program. He engages in photography, writing, playing drums and learning the indigenous Dakota language.
